Fiscal Impact Summary

This bill eliminates the requirement that a student have been homeschooled for a full academic year before that student is eligible to participate in interscholastic activities with a school district. Changing the timing in which these students are allowed to participate does not operationally or fiscally impact the Department of Education or local school districts. Therefore, the bill does not have an expenditure or revenue impact on the General Fund, Federal Funds, Other Funds, or local school districts.

Local Expenditure & Revenue

This bill eliminates the requirement that a student have been homeschooled for a full academic year before that student is eligible to participate in interscholastic activities with a school district. The State Department of Education indicated that, because it simply changes the timing of a student's eligibility, this bill will not impact school district expenditures or revenues.
