Explanation of Fiscal Impact

Introduced on January 9, 2018

State Expenditure

Current law requires persons sentenced to the death penalty to be executed by lethal injection, if they waive their right to elect the method of execution. This bill requires electrocution to be the method, if a person waives the right of election. The bill adds that lethal injection must be available at the time of election, in order to be used as an execution method.

In addition, the bill states the execution must be administered by electrocution regardless of the method elected by the convicted person if: 1) the person waives their right of election as to the method of execution, 2) the means for lethal injection is unavailable at the time of election, or 3) lethal injection is found to be unconstitutional by an appellate court.

The department reports that the drugs used for lethal injection are no longer readily available; as such, the department cannot access pricing with which to generate an estimate of costs related to the administration of lethal injections. However, the department expects any cost savings associated with changing the administration of the death penalty from lethal injection to electrocution to be negligible. There have been no executions in South Carolina since 2011.

The South Carolina Department of Corrections indicates this bill will result in no expenditure impact on the General Fund, Other Funds, or Federal Funds.
